A Kensington sailor seeks America Cup

By STEVE TADY

Traveling around the world each year to sail boats and race cars sounds like fun, perhaps even child's play.

But Kensington's Tom Blackaller is dead serious about his "hobbies."

In fact, the longest winning streak in the history of sports may be riding on Blackaller's ability to maneuver a 12-foot yacht through the seas off Rhode Island.

The United States will once again defend the America's Cup this year, the yacht race held every three years that produces large quantities of publicity for yacht racing.

Blackaller will be vying with one other American team for the right to represent America in the September finals. The Yanks have never lost this race — dating back 132 years to the first race in 1851 — and all Blackaller can think about these days is taking the Cup.

"This is a big focus in my life right now. It is very important," the 43-year-old skipper said.

And so is the winning streak. "It's the longest streak in sports right now and I'd like to keep the Cup in America," he added.

The two American teams battling to get an edge for the upcoming trials are Blackaller's Defender/Courageous team, based at the Balboa Yacht Club in Newport Beach and the Freedom team, led by defending champion skipper Dennis Conner. Freedom is working daily at the San Diego Yacht Club.

Committee urges a voluntary compromise

By JUDY POLUMBAUM

ALBANY — Reiterating earlier warnings that Albany's municipal pension system will run out of money within a decade unless it is reformed, a group of Albany citizens who have spent seven months studying the problem urged the City Council last week to seek a compromise.

"The preferred solution is a voluntary compromise," pension advisory committee chairman Bill Meyer told the council Monday as he submitted a thick report containing the committee's findings, recommendations and supporting documents.

The committee confirmed that the pension system's ability to meet its obligations to both retired members and future retirees is in jeopardy. "This plan has far more liabilities than assets and immediate corrective action is necessary," the report's introduction says.

The pension system's problems could be solved, committee members feel, if present and future retirees would accept a limit on payments in exchange for certain improvements in health and widows' benefits. Along with this, local taxpayers would have to support infusions of money into the fund for some time to come, allowing the principal to grow sufficiently through interest and earnings to cover all future obligations.

Meyer acknowledged that this idea will be "hard to sell" to members of the plan, saying that if he were about to retire from the fire or police department, "I'd want anything I could get."

But faced with the problem of limited funds and the prospect that the fund could go bankrupt, he added, "I think compromise is the name of the game."

Raul Miranda, a retired firefighter and a member of the committee, gave an indication of the type of resistance the city would likely encounter. Pensioners like himself who worked more than 30 years for the city "feeling that when they retired they could relax and enjoy what balance of life they had" are now fearful of losing out, he said.

Miranda cautioned against moving too hastily on

City may start issuing citations

By GORDON RADDUE

EL CERRITO — A proposed ordinance authorizing city employees to issue citations for violations of certain Municipal Code sections passed its first reading by a 3-0 margin at last week's City Council meeting.

City Manager Ronald Creagh said the purpose of the ordinance was not to gain revenue but to seek compliance with the city code without having to go through the cumbersome process involved in dealing with misdemeanors.

The ordinance puts certain violations of the Municipal Code in the category of infractions as opposed to misdemeanors and makes them subject to the issuance of a citation.

Infractions not corrected after three citations or subsequent convictions will be considered misdemeanors punishable by a maximum fine of $500 or imprisonment in the county jail for no more than six months.

The ordinance sets a bail schedule of $25 for the first citation, $100 for the second and $250 for the third.

Originally suggested as a means of enforcing the restrictions imposed by the fire hazard zone adopted by the council last year, the infraction/citation system was determined by city staff to be a useful tool for enforcing other regulatory or revenue-producing provisions of the Municipal Code. The ordinance is directed toward violations in such areas as the business license tax, control of animals, health and safety matters, utility franchises, the building, plumbing and electrical codes, subdivisions and the zoning ordinance.

Council members Margaret Collins and James Allen Jr. were absent.

Trying to move beyond the need for war

By ARLENE EAGAN

ALBANY — The helplessness and hopelessness that people feel when they discuss the possibility of nuclear war can be replaced with optimism and activism.

That's the message of Albany residents Rich and Diane Lohman and John and Marion Cowee. They are members of Creative Initiative, a non-profit organization that was formed in 1962 to educate the public and get people together to "move beyond war."

"War is obsolete," Rich Lohman said. "We need a major change in the way we think. The advent of nuclear weapons means we can no longer look (just) at the survival of ourselves, or the community or the nation. We must look at the survival of the whole planet.

"The name Creative Initiative means that people will take initiative in their own lives. It's not necessary that they join an organization. Individuals can make a difference. People can participate actively in the social and political process."

The Lohmans and the Cowees encourage people to do at least one thing each day to work for a world without war. They suggest writing letters and talking to newspapers, government officials, friends and neighbors to let them know that conflict can be resolved without war.

Marion Cowee (left, with daughter Nisa) and Diane Lohman want to move "beyond war."

They have a list of government officials to contact. They also suggest calling the White House Comments Desk and leaving a message. The number is (202) 456-7639.

"Everything we do is from the base that the future can be positive," Marion Cowee said. "In the past, we thought the future would just come up on us. The future is right now.

"Before, we thought of national security as just defense. That was too narrow a view," she said.

Cowee, 33, has a bachelor's degree in sociology and has taught preschoolers. The Cowees have a four-year-old daughter.

"She's way too young for all this now, but once kids overhear things or read things, then you have to deal with it."

The Lohmans have two teenage daughters who are interested in their parents' work and who Diane Lohman says are "at the point where they ask a lot of questions."

"The strongest modeling is through parents," said Rich Lohman, 41, a math and science teacher at Albany High. His wife agreed.

"If they are hopeful, that gets conveyed to the children," she said.

Yachting may be the sport of the rich; however, this kind of racing goes beyond mere greenbacks. Megabucks will be spent this year to pursue the title. The totals are not in yet, but each camp will surely spend over $3 million attempting to devise the fastest boat for any racing condition.

Each camp is funded by tax-exempt foundations which pour money into new equipment and provide funds for anything that may give a competitive edge.

If the name Courageous sounds familiar, that's the winning boat skippered by Atlanta Braves owner Ted Turner in the 1977 America's Cup.

Turner has been known to throw out an opinion or two on varying subjects. Blackaller has his view of Turner's sailing abilities. "Turner was a good sailor, not a great sailor. He has always been around business and money so he just went out and bought a big fast boat and won," Blackaller said.

Whereas Turner wanted to find a new toy, play with it, and finally discard it, Blackaller has been involved in sailing since childhood, growing up in Berkeley and eventually getting an engineering degree from UC-Berkeley.

He has won two world championships in star-class sailing. He's entered almost every major event over the past 10 or 15 years and wants to unseat Conner very badly.

"We're getting together a strong effort here and we're going to come back and beat him," Blackaller barked, seated behind the desk at North Sails, the sail manufacturing company he owns in Alameda's Mariner Square.

Blackaller becomes quite animated as he talks of the upcoming competition. The drive to win burns inside him and bursts out now and then. "I don't go for the salt spray and the wind in my face. I'm in this for the competition. I want to win," he said.

First, Blackaller must pilot the fastest boat on his team. "If my crew and I lose, I go home. If John Kolius and the Courageous crew win, they go to Rhode Island."

He struts around his company, showing off new kinds of material used for sails and the computerized cutting machine which cuts custom sails for a variety of customers around the world.

"Some of the new fabrics they are coming out with are amazing. They are more like metal than cloth," he said.

Blackaller is constantly looking for some way to go faster in the water, yet he won't turn down a good romp around a race track in a car.

He has only been racing cars for two years, but he's been successful, recently capturing a Formula Ford race at Sears Point Raceway in Sonoma.

He has raced for Richmond's Pfeiffer Ride Racing at Laguna Seca and several other points up and down the West Coast.

Has the auto racing helped make boat racing more affordable? That question deserved a laugh. "I made $700 last year while racing cars. It's not horribly expensive to race ($15,000 a year) but I don't make money at it. It is very much a hobby," he said.

"You really have to work at it if you want to make a living at auto racing. Think of how hard it is to make money playing baseball. It's 10 times harder to make money at auto racing."

Blackaller's love for racing on land is on hold right now while he becomes more possessed with the quest for the Cup.

The trials begin on June 16 in Rhode Island and Blackaller will be traveling all over in the next two months getting ready for the big race.

"It's going to be hectic around here. But I fly about 200,000 miles a year going to races anyway, so it won't be a big change. Sometimes, it's hard to figure where my home is. But this area is as close as any," he said.

Blackaller hopes to find a home for the large silver Cup which will be handed to the winner of the race in September.

County honors volunteer

El Cerrito woman gets one of the top pri

By GORDON RADDUE

A San Pablo woman who has been driving disadvantaged people to medical appointments for 10 years and a toy-making Berkeley church group headed by an El Cerrito woman have been honored as Contra Costa County's Volunteers of the Year.

Agnes Shanklin, who has medical problems of her own, was saluted last week by the Board of Supervisors as Volunteer of the Year for her 10 years of service driving disabled and elderly people to doctors appointments and abused youngsters to therapy treatments.

The Group of the Year award went to the All Souls Episcopal Church Toy Committee, headed by Peggy Cain of El Cerrito, which last year fashioned 450 toys for underprivileged children.

Al and Ruth Case of Pacheco were named Couple of the Year for their volunteer work in social services.

Doni Blumenstock, county social service volunteer coordinator for West County, nominated Shanklin and the Toy Committee for their awards.

"All volunteers are wonderful," said Blumenstock. "What sets Agnes apart is that she's been volunteering her services for 10 years and she can barely get around herself because of asthma and other medical problems.

"She's been known to get out of a hospital bed in the morning and take people to the hospital in the afternoon."

Agnes' husband, Tom, actually has been a volunteer driver for a year longer than his wife.

"Tom used to drive every day," said Blumenstock, "until he took a day off and opened his Shanklin's Lock Shop on Rumrill Road. He still volunteers whenever we need him."

The All Souls Episcopal Church group got its West County service through Blumenstock, who is ber of the Berkeley church.

"I stood up in church one day and asked for needy children in West County," she said. "I around a coffee can and the people responded with about $300. I was really impressed."

That was only the beginning of their genero Toy Committee was formed under Cain's leade made 150 toys the first year, including handsom Raggedy Ann and Andy dolls that are especially with needy youngsters.

"Each toy is hugged personally by Peggy," menstock. "She says it has to have the 'love' she'll let it go to children."

Although it was said at the Board of Sup meeting that there is no way to put a value on the butions of volunteers, Blumenstock found a way doing so, came up with some very impressive fig

"Countywide," she said, "there were 1,247 reported last year, and they put in an estimated hours of service. At $6.15 an hour, that comes 432,950 worth of volunteer service."

Among those receiving honorable mention in unteer of the Year categories were Eugene Alva Louis Wiliferd, nominated by the Rodeo Center in unteer-couple category, and, in the same bracke Sauer and Wes Wilkes of San Pablo, who were by the San Pablo branch of the county Public Li changes in the plan, saying, "Why does the city of Albany have to be a pioneer? Why don't we see how other cities are handling this predicament?"

A compromise solution also would involve a job of salesmanship to the public, since it might take five or ten years before the fund could build up to a point of self-sufficiency. "The taxpayers are going to have to subsidize this fund for a certain amount of time," committee member Jerome Blank observed.

While taxpayers are unwilling to make an "unlimited" commitment, Blank said, they might be persuaded to give this limited support if pensioners accepted a cap on payments.

Blank pointed out that Proposition 13 had given homeowners a substantial tax break, and added, "We're going to have to give a little of that back."

Albany's pension system covers fire and police department employees hired before 1971, when the city joined the state-sponsored Public Employees Retirement System. It currently includes 18 active employees and 27 retirees.

Under a City Charter provision, the plan is funded by a nine percent withholding from members' salaries plus a matching amount from the city. However, this has proved insufficient, and in recent years the city has had to make infusions into the plan from the General Fund and other sources.

Taxpayers already have demonstrated their resistance to subsidizing pensions. Last year, the City Council on its own levied a special one-year tax to cover unfunded pension liabilities for the current fiscal year after a similar tax had been rejected at the polls.

The advisory committee identified several factors behind the funds' problems, the most important being a 1969 court ruling known as the Neuhauser decision, which tied pension payments to current salary levels rather than to pensioners' salaries at the time of retirement.

The Neuhauser decision led to a drastic escalation of pension obligations. For instance, Jerry Neuhauser, the police inspector who filed the lawsuit, saw his pension jump from $300 to $633 a month.

The committee also found that inflation, overly-conservative investment management and insufficient provisions had contributed to the plan's financ lems.

Chairman Meyer characterized the docum ted Monday as an "interim report," saying that mittee will come up with firm recommendations completion of a new actuarial study.

The most recent actuarial report on the pen was made just last summer, but the committee was one exploring various alternative solutions for the Pension Board, which administers the city's pension has agreed to commission the new study.

The committee report, in addition to pushing "voluntary" solution, puts forth other possible the event that voluntarism proves unworkable.

One alternative would be to temporarily eliminate salary increases for active employees. Th impose a de facto cap on pension increases, since payments go up with inflationary increases in scales.

"This approach was not favored," the comm port says, "because it placed a very large burden active employees."

A variation of this idea would be to restrict in ranks primarily affecting the pensioners. For most police retirees under the plan and active po cers still in the plan reached the rank of above.

Such salary freezes would be coupled with supplement the pension fund while allowing it grow.

The committee also considered freezing the pension plan and putting future contributions into fined contribution" setup, which essentially would individual retirement accounts for each employee approach would not affect employees who already retired.

In a memo to the Pension Board, the committee these and other possibilities which it wants the actu test.

City Council members agreed to draw up a list additional items they would like the actuaries to er.

A creative way to fight war

"Parents may think the issue (of war and nuclear destruction) is so big, it overwhelms them."

Lohman and Cowee have gone to schools, businesses, churches and parent-teacher organizations to explain their philosophy to parents.

Marion Cowee said Creative Initiative encourages people to learn to resolve conflicts without violence, and to recognize that conflicts are "normal; they are just differences."

"We need to respect each others' differences," Diane Lohman said. "We need the cooperation of races, nations and religions to work together, but act at the same time to not lose our richness and uniqueness."

The Lohmans began working for Creative Initiative in 1968. Diane, 40, now volunteers for them full-time.

"We had been married five years and were looking for something that our family could be involved in," Rich Lohman said. "It was a unifying and pulling together of our whole life."

"Everyone looks for what adds meaning to life," his wife added. "I'm an action-oriented person, but I knew it had to be a lot more than action."

She said she chose to work for Creative Initiative because she thought so many groups concentrated only on action or only on changing attitudes. She found that Creative Initiative was a "combination of action and attitude" that worked for her.

"Our goal is to get 1,000 people by December 1983 to say yes to four ideas," she said. The ideas are: doing one thing each day to promote peace, resolving conflicts without violence, not seeing others as enemies and educating others.

Creative Initiative, which is based in Palo Alto, has 450 members around the Bay Area and about 500 members nationwide. It is funded by individual member contributions.

This year, Creative Initiative is sponsoring a series of speakers and is offering courses called "Beyond War." The organization has also produced a short film entitled "No Frames. No Boundaries." that shows how the world is connected and interdependent, in spite of national boundaries.

Anti-nuclear movie has a positive approach

ALBANY — About 20 people saw the film "No Frames. No Boundaries." recently at the Albany Library. The 21-minute film is produced by Creative Initiative and emphasizes the interdependence of people and the need to respond to the threat of nuclear warfare.

The film takes its theme from the observations of astronaut Rusty Schweickart while he was viewing earth from the Apollo 9 spaceship.

"From where you see it, the earth is a whole...and it is so beautiful," Schweickart said. "There are no frames. There are no boundaries."

The film was shown with "The Last Epidemic," a film about the medical consequences of nuclear war. Many people in the audience commented that "No Frames. No Boundaries." was a contrast because it was more "hopeful and optimistic."

"It was excellent," said Wendy Thompson, who teaches English as a second language in the Richmond Unified School District. "I liked the idea of starting with evolution to show where we're coming from and where we're going to. It was refreshing, more positive."

"It was a nice film and gave you a different perspective," said Bill Holmes, a local musician. "But it was not effective in terms of what you can do yourself."

"I think it was a beautiful idea to erase boundaries and emphasize the oneness of people," Kensington resident Betty Segal said. "But I have a hard time not seeing President Reagan as an enemy. He's impervious to reason."

"To pose no enemy is a radical statement considering the world we live in today," Rich Lohman of Creative Initiative told the audience. "But we have a basic choice: to be hopeless or to be hopeful."

Gunman gets surprise after EC bank robbe

By JOHN ADAMS

EL CERRITO — A nattily dressed gunman who robbed Twin Pines Savings and Loan last Monday was thwarted when the packet of money he got exploded in a burst of red dye as he escaped.

The harried bandit and his accomplice subsequently hurled the cash out the window of their car.

El Cerrito police quickly surrounded the savings and loan at 11481 San Pablo Ave. after the alarm was sounded about 11:40 a.m., but the bandit and his wheel-man accomplice had already reached the freeway in their older-model, light brown station wagon.

But a trucker who watched the getaway along Eastshore Boulevard pointed out where the thieves hurled the stolen cash after the packet exploded in their hands.

The cash found beside Eastshore Boulevard was stained with the red dye contained in the money packet, and police believe the robbers and their vehicle are also daubed with the dye.

Police described the robber who entered the bank as black, in his late 20s, 5 feet 5 inches tall, 140 pou neatly dressed in a beige hat, black sportcoat and b with a white shirt and gold-rimmed glasses. There adequate description of the driver of the getaway

By Oswald Jacoby and James Jacoby

The British magazine International Popular Bridge features a regular series of humorous articles by David Bird who concocts some extraordinary hands for them.

The bidding on the hand can be explained by the fact that North thought his partner's one no-trump rebid showed 15-17 points rather than the actual 12.

West made his normal lead of the diamond to South's king while East discarded the eight of spades.

South took dummy's king and queen of clubs. He decided that it didn't really matter how many tricks he went down, so he led a heart and finessed his jack. It held, and he now had his slam if only hearts would break 3-3, so he cashed his king of hearts.

When West dropped the 10 South paused for a moment since it now appeared that the heart queen was not going to drop, but he saw that he could still make the hand if West held the spade ace. He decided that West did hold that card, since with the spade ace East would almost surely have overcalled. So he led a heart to dummy's ace and ran his clubs to come down to a four-card ending.

West had to come down to the singleton ace of spades to hold three diamonds. The four of diamonds was led. West played the nine and dummy the queen. The king of spades threw West in and he had to give dummy the last two tricks.
